Ed Bryant leads St. Louis County Economic Council's Economic Development Collaborative, an initiative created in 2006 by County Executive Charlie A. Dooley. Since its inception, the Collaborative has developed important Countywide initiatives in the areas of transportation, housing and development.

Under Bryant's direction, the Collaborative implements regional economic development activities, utilizing the various agencies, programs, public and private leadership, and businesses within St. Louis County. He develops initiatives that increase municipal awareness of St. Louis County services, and supports economic development efforts such as business attraction and retention by expediting and simplifying how private-sector projects are approved.

Bryant has expertise developing and executing effective strategic and integrated communications and public affairs solutions for a variety of for-profit and non-profit organizations. Most recently, as the Director of Public Affairs for Pfizer Inc's St. Louis laboratories, Bryant created an award-winning public affairs program for the company's research and development facility. His earlier experience includes: St. Louis Regional Health Commission, Kupper Parker Communications, U.S. Census Bureau, University of Memphis, and New Jersey Department of Human and Social Services.

St. Louis County Economic Council serves as the County's economic development agency, driving growth and prosperity in the most economically important county in Missouri. As the only economic development agency in the state to hold the esteemed Accredited Economic Development Organization from the International Economic Development Council, it provides a broad range of services through its six divisions: business development, business finance, economic development collaborative, real estate and community development, St. Louis Enterprise Centers, and World Trade Center Saint Louis.

Missouri's only Accredited Economic Development Organization
